I don't have the revised edition, but I came across the original about 4 years ago. At the time I was 20 years old, lost, struggling with my beliefs, and unsure if there was any foundation at all to having integrity and doing what I feel is right. I was an agnostic when I came across the book, and had gone through the stages of atheism to agnosticism to atheism and back to agnosticism multiple times, but it just didn't FEEL right. I had become an atheist because all religion had caused (in my limited perception) was judgment, killing, condescension, manipulation, wars etc, so I felt like there was nothing positive to the whole practice. Then eventually I became an agnostic because I ventured "if I can't prove that there IS a God, then I can't prove that there ISN'T a God", so atheism to me at the time became as ridiculous as being religious. Agnosticism seemed like the only way to go, until I came across this book. And my God, let me tell you I WOKE UP. After I read the section in the book where Hawkin's clarifies that all the wrathful, angry, and hateful depictions of God are just anthropomorphic (human characteristics) projections onto God, which have no Reality in the here and now. I always questioned why would God want people to kill in His name, why does so much negativity come out of religion? Then Power vs. Force awakened me to realize that it's just human error in the name of religion. It's our OWN weakness, character defects, errors, that happen in the name of God, and then people blame God for letting all of it happen in His name (there's a little thing called free will by the way. Yeahhh, kiiindaa important.
